Canada's sweetheart Rachel McAdams is heading for marriage. The film, that is.

The gorgeous London, Ont., starlet just wrapped filming in British Columbia of the movie Marriage with megastars Pierce Brosnan and Chris Cooper. Marriage is based on a classic crime novel, Five Roundabouts to Heaven.

Brosnan, now the ex 007, has nothing but love for his costars. "I am in the very fine company of actors whom I have the greatest admiration for," he says.

The 1940s romantic drama focuses on Cooper's character, Philip Bartels, an unfaithful married man. He plots to kill his wife, Beatrice Bartels, played by Patricia Clarkson, rather than expose her to the shame and humiliation of a divorce. (How thoughtful!) McAdams plays the character of Lorna Dickson and Brosnan plays Peter Harding.

Brosnan describes the film as, "Set in Seattle, 1949. The film has a grace and an elegance, and is a story we can all relate to – one of love and marriage, time lost, secrets and sorrows."

Moving Mobile

Mobile might as well paint red maple leaves all over themselves to show their love for their Canuck fans.

Originally from Montreal, the now Toronto-based indie-alternative band loves the attention they're receiving.

"People are nice in general. We didn't get bras thrown at us," says drummer Pierre-Marc Hamelin, referring to an incident at Edgefest with another band. "It's fun seeing people appreciating our music."

Signed to Universal Music, Mobile has been playing together for more than a decade.

Besides Hamelin, the band consists of Mat Joly (vocals), Christian Brais (guitar), Frank Williamson (guitar) and Dominic Viola (bass).

Mobile's Out of My Head video is the only one in Much-Music Countdown history to spend two non-consecutive weeks at number one. Two different versions of the song and video were played.

As for the move from Montreal to the T. Dot, Williamson thinks karma seems to be on the band's side.

"We tried to make things work in Montreal, but then came to Toronto and signed our record deal. It was a good move," he says.

Even so, Williamson admits to still getting a bit nervous when he plays to Toronto crowds.

"In Montreal, there are friends and family there. I never get nervous in front of crowds," he says. "It's a little sparkle that comes in and I feel and play better."

Mobile prepares for a three-week tour this month in the United Kingdom, as well as starting work on new material.

There's something about Jim and Cameron

Newmarket's rubber-faced celeb set to release new movie

The teaming of Jim Carrey with Cameron Diaz in 1994's The Mask boosted both their careers.

Now it looks like they're hoping a reunion makes lightning strike twice.

Carrey, the rubber-faced Newmarket native, pairs up again with Diaz in the upcoming A Little Game Without Consequence, a comedy/drama tentatively set for a 2008 release.

They play a married couple who plot a practical joke on their family and friends by feigning a split, only to discover no one thought they belonged together in the first place.

While Carrey has turned out many solid box-office comedies, critics received recent efforts, like 2005's Fun With Dick and Jane and 2003's Bruce Almighty, with lukewarm reviews.

And Diaz hasn't made us laugh since she had semen in her hair in There's Something About Mary, more than eight years ago.

Let's hope this new little game has positive consequences for them both.
